It's on again! APC Colloquium back in 2015

The Australian Pharmacy Council (APC) is pleased to announce its 3rd annual colloquium with this year's theme – "The secret ingredient: can we turn up the heat on experiential education."

Located in Canberra on Tuesday 25 August the event will bring together national and international speakers to discuss experiential education. Keynote speaker, UK pharmacist Ravi Sharma, will discuss his experiences with attendees about the emerging UK education model and how pharmacy students are supported.

Local pharmacists Anthony Tassone and Dr Erica Sainsbury will lead a profession debate, in keeping with the theme, titled "Only the profession can bake the cake". A number of speakers will share their experience, current research and innovation in experiential placements. Attendees will also get the opportunity to participate in a workshop and networking session on developing role models within the profession.

Debra Rowett, APC President, said that "the event brings together academia, the profession and the students to discuss contemporary issues impacting the future of the profession starting with how we train our next generation of pharmacists to meet our community's needs."

Registrations for the APC 2015 Colloquium are now open, with students and interns offered free registration to the day and post-event networking function. The event will again feature a free live webcast of the day and a twitter stream using the #apcevents hash tag.

Visit the APC website, www.pharmacycouncil.org.au, to register or find out more information about the 2015 Colloquium. We look forward to seeing you there.
